SCIENTIFIC AND CONFERENCE ACTIVITIES

Prof. Marina Paolucci is the author of over 155 scientific publications. As of 5/7/2022 she is in possession of the three medians of the BIO / 06 sector per commissioner. His research takes place in both basic and applied research.

Basic research

Basic research is aimed at studying the biological mechanisms underlying the reproduction, growth and feeding behavior of aquatic animal species. The activities concerning:

- Study of the reproductive cycle and sex steroids. Genomic and non-genomic role played by estradiol through the specific receptor, in the neuroendocrine regulation of reproduction.
- Regulation of eating behavior in relation to diversified dietary treatments; characterization of digestive enzymes; determination of the calpain-calpastatin enzyme system in skeletal muscle.

Applied research

From the field of basic research, in turn, different lines of research arise that can be defined as applied research. These are aimed at studying the nutrition and growth of aquatic species of commercial interest (shrimp, sea urchin, fish) in confined conditions, both on land and in the sea. The study of polymeric matrices and bioactive molecules for the production of functional pellets is linked to the research on the feeding of species of commercial interest. The activities concerning the:

- Formulation of biopolymer matrix pellets for animal feed use. Polysaccharides obtained from renewable sources are used for the production of pellets to be used for feeding aquatic species of commercial interest.
- Use of biopolymer matrices with additives (edible coatings) for the preservation of products of animal origin, for extending the shelf-life of products of animal origin.
- Use of natural bioactive molecules for the production of functionalized pellets for animal feed, and of functionalized coatings and films for extending the shelf life. Studies on the effect on growth and health performances.

Prof. Marina Paolucci actively participates in the major national and international conferences in the sector.
